

CMC Girls Affinity Group

What is an affinity group?

Affinity groups are like a club, with some important differences. Unlike student clubs, which are open to all who express interest, affinity work is specific to participants identifying as a member of that group through a common identifier. In this case, our affinity group is for CMC students identifying as female.

The affinity group meeting becomes what is known as a "safe space" allowing members to speak openly within the group without the pressure to educate others first or to defend one's identity. It is a time and place to step away from having to "represent" others and to become an individual within the group, rather than fitting into someone else's perception of what it means to be a girl.

Topics to be discussed are chosen by Affinity Group members each meeting.
